

PROGRAM OVERVIEW

Explore the extraordinary possibilities that exist when we translate concepts enabling remote, autonomous healthcare to more challenging environments — from the furthest reaches of space to terrestrial earth.

When you're far from a hospital setting, time is critical, and resources are limited: supporting autonomous functioning become more important than ever. This is true for providing care in a space station, in an air ambulance, or in a remote community miles away from a hospital.

The inaugural Care in the Air Symposium will showcase cutting-edge innovations and technological developments changing the delivery of health care in extreme and isolated environments.

TARGET AUDIENCE

We invite participation from professionals who are interested in learning about innovations in aerospace and transport medicine. Symposium programming will be of interest to:

- Health professionals and researchers working in, or with an interest in, aerospace medicine, critical care transport, emergency medicine, critical care medicine, trauma care, and occupational medicine
- Air ambulance, paramedic, and critical care transport medicine professionals
- Military and civilian aviation medicine personnel
- Entrepreneurs developing technologies with healthcare application
- Students interested in learning about, and networking with, experts working in these fields
